O'Shea, Marine Painter, Says Critic

Artist John O'Shea, who has been established at Carmel Highlands for several months, has an exhibition of his pictures in San Francisco, which will continue until next Wednesday. Willard Huntington Wright says of this young Irishman's work:

"Despite O'Shea's landscapes, many of which are both attractive pictorially and competent technically, I cannot help feeling that he is essentially a marine painter. His reflections to the varying moods of the sea appear to be more spontaneous and profound than his reactions to land vistas. In any event, his strongest work is to be found in those pictures which depict the stretches of ocean and the breaking surfs along the Carmel coast. In these canvases there is a greater sense of intimacy with his subject, and a more compelling impulse toward grandeur than are to be found in his landscapes."

Walter G. Moffat, who is now in San Francisco, will spend a few days here next week, and then leaves for the East to bring his father to Pasadena.

Home Service Work

In Carmel, as in other communities, Red Cross Home Service work will be continued, not only through the period of demobilization, but as a peace time activity, and will be expanded to include others than the families of soldiers and sailors. This was recently decided upon at the National Headquarters in response to requests from all over the United States.

In their plans the officials are especially concerned to see that the service to the families of soldiers and sailors be unimpaired.

And this is particularly emphasized: They will adhere to the policy of giving assistance only to those who request it, never going where the offer of help is unwelcome. There will be care to avoid duplicating the work of other helpful agencies.

BULLETIN ARTICLES

Did you read those two Ruth Taylor stories which the San Francisco Bulletin sprung on us last week? For fear you missed them, and because many have asked that they be published in the Pine Cone, we present them today. We regret that we are unable to reproduce the illustrations.

ACTION IN CARMEL — ALL THE SHOW NOT ON SCREEN

Here in San Francisco, where there are more movies than a leopard has spots, with continuous performances running only for a short time in the wee small hours of the morning, it's hard for us to get used to the Wednesday and Saturday movie show idea as they work it in small towns.

That's the way it is in Carmel. Two changes a week, and unless you've lived in the town for more than two years, you go only to refresh your memory. All the films have stood the test of age.

On movie days the movie man, who is also a delicatessen proprietor, goes up and down the main street with a piece of green chalk, advertising his attraction on the board sidewalks (there are at least ten feet intact) and on the store steps.

We went Saturday night. Big night! All the best people go then, you know. Fact: the whole town turns out for the week-end flicker drama.

Since no lanterns were furnished with our shack, we lit up the kerosene lamp and picked our way to the box office where the familiar, not easily forgotten face of the movie and delicatessen merchant met us with his usual "What'll it be?"

We were early, so had a good choice of chairs placed in rows, and an excellent opportunity to see the townfolk arrive.

They came—all of 'em. The druggist, his wife and kids; the grocery man and his folks, some descendants of the early Spanish natives, the town bad boys who left the pool hall long enough for the show, the poetic soul who reads Tennyson and Browning of an evening to such as care to listen, the policeman, the "city" newsboys, the lady real estate agents and all the other good townsfolk. They held a short "sociable" until the operator had the first reel in the hand-operated machine.

A little girl in short skirts, probably the delicatessen daughter, took her seat at the piano and played one of her "pieces" for an overture, and selections later between each reel, while the operator changed the film and the audience sat on the edge of the chairs wondering if Bill Hart could hold the bowlegs pack at bay until the villain escaped and the heroine was saved.

They had an educational film on the bill, too, that showed how some women were doing their bit for overalls and everything, which the town "toughie," who sat in front of us, said, with emphasis on the pens, was "so cold it smelled" (the film, not the clothes). And when it was half through a little kid in the back of the room yelled: "Hey! The war is over!"

"LAMPING" FOR TRUTH IS CARMEL OUTDOOR SPORT

Never did hear whether Diogenes found that honest man, or the truth, or whatever it was he was looking for when he perambulated around toting a lantern to light him on his way. I'm under the impression that he didn't.

However, he was alone in his quest back there in the dark ages.

Now along comes a whole town of Diogeneses. There ought to be some hope for them—some hope when a whole village of folks take up their lanterns in the search for light.

At least I guess that's what they are doing down there at Carmel-by-the-Sea. For every person has a lantern, from the smallest child to the very oldest—that is, all but the most affluent inhabitants, and they are possessed of electric searchlights.

For every night when a Carmelite ventures forth he fills his kerosene lamp and lights it before he starts picking his way over the bumpy, rutty roads to truth.

You see Carmel is inhabited mainly by poets and artists and thinkers and writers, each one in his own medium trying to find the "light"— or truth, or whatever it is they call it. I don't know much about these things or how they go about finding their object, but I noticed that they do quite a lot of running around, dressed up in breeches and vest coats and flowing ties. Most any time of the day on the main street of the town you can see them in quest of sweet pickles and sardines from the delicatessen store (they call it delicatessen there), or oil paints from the miscellaneous shop.

In most cases the female Diogeneses were more interesting than the male. I say "interesting" because I believe that's the word one uses when one doesn't wish to commit one's self. Many of them wear their hair bobbed and men's clothes and are very picturesque.

You'd run into truth seekers at most every turn—in the fields, painting; on the rocks, dreaming, and up in the trees, reading! But from what I heard, the painters in the fields are really "getting at the roots of things" more than some of the others.

Be that as it may, if beauty is truth, and I, too, were a Diogenes, I'd stop in Carmel forever, for there certainly Nature outdid herself; and her trees and skies and seas and mountains would end my quest forever.

But, alas! I must work for a living, and be only an envier of these Diogeneses, with their kerosene lamps to light them about the town where the only street lights are stars. But I hope they find what they are looking for.

Came Too Close Together

We of Carmel love to go out, we love to meet in public places for pictures and music and readings, we love to show our appreciation of the good things provided for us, but to expect us to turn out in large number for two distinct concerts, given within eighteen hours of each other, is beyond our capacity at any time, and especially in the month of April.

It might be well hereafter for those who are promoting these affairs to get together and discuss dates.

On Friday evening last a group of well known and talented musicians from San Francisco—George Kruger, pianist; Guiseppe Jollain, violinist; Mlle. Grace Gardner, soprano, and Miss Maybel S. West, accompanist, rendered a splendid program before a small but appreciative audience.

On Saturday afternoon, under the auspices of the "American Friends of Musicians in France," another program was presented by such distinguished artists as Horace Britt, Elias Hecht, Emilio Puyans, and Ruth Coniston.

Both affairs were worthy a much larger attendance, but lack of promotion and publicity, and also the short interval between the events precluded this.

OUR NEW PRESS

The Pine Cone's new $1500 cylinder press that arrived from the American Type Founders Company of San Francisco, and is now set up and in running order.

The Pine Cone, as a job printing concern, was established in November, 1914, and the first number of the weekly newspaper was issued in February, 1915.

From the beginning the business has been run on a cash basis, principally ups. There has not been a time when we were without a printing job to go on with.

The publication of the "Pine Cone" has steadily increased, not only at home, but throughout the State and the East. Town advertising, except from a few concerns, has been generous. And the Peninsula generally recognizes the value of the paper as an advertising medium.

The addition of this new press means more than just adding to our equipment, and a large paper. It is an expression of our confidence in the stability and future progress of Carmel and vicinity. It is an acknowledgement of our appreciation of the past, present and future cooperation of the people.

Mother Carrington in Her New Home

At last Mrs. Carrington is in her own home and for years she has been the tutelary genius presiding over the musical destinies of our children, the foster mother so to speak, of more than one generation of Carmelites, and the friend of all, old and young, and the comforter of many in sickness and distress.

For years she has divided her professional time between Carmel and Pacific Grove, going and coming each week, having only a temporary home here. But now she has her own home in Carmel, her own studio, overlooking the dunes and the sea. Appropriately enough this house might be called the "Home of Loving Hearts," for it was planned and built by her many Carmel friends as a material expression of their affection and regard for her, and also as a slight return for her unselfish labor in the community.

Mrs. Carrington is one of Carmel's most loved and most useful citizens. Music is her art, her life, and she has followed it with single-hearted devotion. But she has been more than the mere teacher. She has been the friend, guide, councelor and mentor of her pupils.

Her studio has been the children's "social center." Each week they have gathered for games, music and dramatic entertainments and it is not too much to say that in future years, when the younger generation of Carmelites has grown up, their happiest memories will be of the days and nights passed in Mother Carrington's studio. But her work has not been with children only. Her home has always been open to all who love music, and it is these friends whom she has welcomed and helped in their musical work who have had a hand in the building of her home.
